DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The house is in three sections--two of log and one of framed construction. The north wing is 1-1/2 stories, built of log. On the north end is a large external stone chimney. The east and west facades are two bays with central doorways. In plan, this wing is a single room with a boxed staircase in the southeast corner; these stairs are an addition to the structure, since the loft floor joists were cut off to insert them. In the loft, rafters are mortised, tenoned, and pegged at the ridge and birmouthed over the top log at the eaves. The interior walls are whitewashed over the logs. On the west facade is a shed roofed porch; originally, the porch had a steeper pitch.

The south section is in two parts: the western room is log, and the eastern room, frame. From the exterior, they have a unified appearance, with double external chimneys on the south end and three bay east and west facades. The partition wall between the rooms, however, is log and was once an exterior wall. The west room has a boxed staircase in the northeast corner leading to a single second floor room. A boxed staircase also leads to the attic. The east room also has a boxed staircase in the northeast corner.

The roof framing of the log section has a half-lapped and pegged rafters that rest on a mailer which is, in turn, supported by the ends of the second floor ceiling joists extended beyond the exterior walls. The west slope of the original roof has been covered by rafters at a lower pitch that carry the roof over the frame section.

The frame section is framed in two parts. The wall posts support a girt at the second floor level. The posts for the second floor framing are framed into the girt, so no vertical members extend from sill to plate.
